Searching for literature on your PhD topic, getting hold of it, managing, reading, analysing and synthesising it can be a daunting task. It takes so much time and there seems to be no end in sight.

This workshop will offer a variety of methods and tools that can help you to

- systematically search for, find and manage the most relevant literature on your topic,
- stay focused during your literature search and reading,
- actively engage with and write about the literature you are finding,
- write and revise a meaningful and interesting to read discussion of the literature.

So, no matter whether you are just starting your literature review, are in the middle of it, are maybe getting lost in it, or want to review and improve the chapter(s) you have pretty much finished already: everyone is invited to participate and will benefit from the various tools, tips and practical exercises of this workshop.
