There are some glossy websites and booklets about how to complete your doctoral research in Germany (even a few in English). But very often a lot of necessary implicit knowledge is missing: knowledge which is known to most professional actors and stakeholders, but not spelled out (sometimes due to a lack of political correctness) and thus remains unknown to outsiders, including incoming or visiting doctoral and postdoctoral researchers.

This event will try to close this information gap:

- What are the preconditions for a successful PhD project in Germany?
- What are the options for financing a PhD project in Germany?
- How does a PhD project work in the various disciplines?
- What are the possibilities for employment within the university system and outside of it in Germany?
- How can one advance an academic career beyond the doctorate in Germany?
- What in the German system is different from other academic systems, what is similar?

There will be a short presentation of essential points followed by a discussion of participants' questions. This workshop is immediately followed by a reception for international PhD students (in the same room), so it might make sense to combine both events. You are warmly invited!
