

Short Opinion

"Citizen participation and municipal systems".

Whereas participatory design has traditionally been concerned with democracy, this emphasis has weakened recently, at the same time as more and more possibilities of participation are offered through Web 2.0. Based on experiences from a recent series of projects in municipality-citizen interaction, mediated by Web 2.0 technologies, this paper looks at how democracy takes many forms, and discuss conceptual, technological and methodological implications of that.

I'm quite interested in EU projects (of all kinds, but in particular NoE and STREPS). Trying to think about themes: appropriation; privacy - private/public; citizens and democracy...

Exchange of PhD students is a priority of mine. We have problems exchanging master thesis students (both ways), whereas we happily exchange master students on their earlier year.
